Photoshop, even when it was still an ImageReady edition, was a truly professional software for photographers and graphic designers. The majority of serious users chose Photoshop over other image editing software. If you are a serious photographer, graphic designer or web designer, then you may need Photoshop. Photoshop is probably the most famous graphic design or photography software out there. In this guide, you will learn how to use Photoshop on macOS to create a variety of elements, edit and enhance your images, make high-quality illustrations, create videos and collages and much more. Photoshop supports many raster and vector formats and you can open pictures directly from your Mac Camera Roll or imported from various files like JPG, GIF, PNG, TIF, EPS, PDF, PSD and more. You can also create images or edit an existing image directly in Photoshop. Finally, Photoshop also supports the WebP, JPEG, TIFF and other formats. Starting out with Photoshop Adobe Photoshop is designed for professionals and hobbyists as it is packed with powerful features, but this also means it is not so user-friendly. You need to give up some controls to get the most out of the program. There are some basic applications that can be used to create most things in Photoshop. So, you don't need to get Photoshop to learn how to make text, how to make shapes or how to create layers. Of course, it will be much easier for you if you use Photoshop. Create or edit images If you already have images with you, you can create new images in Photoshop. You can also edit existing images and create new versions of them. If you don't have images, you can import them directly from your Mac Camera Roll, then you will be able to open your photos and start editing them right away. You can edit or create images in different ways in Photoshop. You can modify your photo, like adding text, changing colors or adding elements. You can also create custom shapes in Photoshop. You can create new images or edit existing ones using Adobe Photoshop. Saving and exporting The main difference between Photoshop and Adobe Elements is that Photoshop saves the changes you make to your image and Adobe Elements does not. This makes Photoshop a bit more difficult to use. But if you change your mind about what you've done, you can simply save your work to resume where you left off.
