In a joint venture, the joint venturers share the profits from the enterprise in proportion to their contributions. A joint venture is often formed when two or more individuals or companies pool their expertise to create a business that they could not create separately. For example, a business may be formed with two individuals each having technical expertise in a particular area and resources to develop the idea of combining the expertise of the two individuals. When the business is formed and the two individuals participate in it, each takes on responsibility for a portion of the business. To the extent that the business succeeds, each joint venturer will share in the profits. However, if the business fails, each joint venturer will bear the losses and expenses. Joint Venture: Joint venture is a relationship between two or more persons, firms, or corporations under which the parties share in the profits and losses of the joint venture according to the value of their contributions.
