Its spectrum is similar to that of 3 Cephei [@grau2002], an O9.5 III star, but more luminous (in the optical). It is also similar to the O7.5 Ia type star HR 7117 (HD 4318, first catalogued by @hoffleit1982). There are two more stars within the nebulosity. One of these is very blue, but the spectrum of the other is similar to that of HR 7117, with a $V-I$ colour of +2.3. This would suggest that it is a more luminous, early B-type star, but with a later type companion. Its position is consistent with it being an O7 V star, on the basis of line ratios alone. However, it is very blue, and would therefore require a very strong wind. Conclusion =====

In this paper, we have presented the first results from our Magellan Intermediate Resolution Spectrograph on the orbital period of the interaction between the Milky Way and the dwarf galaxy WLM. The line profiles of all four lines we have studied show evidence for these components, and a velocity and radial-velocity amplitude with a clear sinusoidal variation. The three lines that are most sensitive to the ionized-gas ($O\ I\ \lambda 6300$, $H\ \alpha$ and $N\ II\ \lambda 6583$) display a double-peak structure, with an amplitude of about $50\ \text{km s}^{-1}$. The profile for the $N\ II\ \lambda 6584$ line is very different, with three very strong components. The $N\ II\ \lambda 6584$ line is, in fact, double in width (by $70\ \text{km s}^{-1}$) and in depth, with two distinct components in the line profile. In the last few years, dwarf galaxies have been suggested as an important vehicle for the transport of gas and dust through the Galactic halo [@gardiner2007]. In this scenario, dwarf galaxies are scattered out of the Galactic halo by either ram pressure or tidal
