Enter this domain name or if this domain name is just user name, . -11- circumstances here support the exclusion of the challenged evidence. The probation officer testified that it would not be in the best interest of the minor children to be placed in the custody of the mother. There was ample evidence to support that conclusion because of the children's age and the alleged behavior of the mother. The family court found the concerns were "real," and that there would be "irreparable harm" if the mother was allowed continued visitation. Neither the director of the child welfare agency nor the court appointed special advocate testified to any specific harm to the children if the mother were to have continued visitation with them. We conclude the district court did not abuse its discretion by excluding the evidence of the mother's out-of-state criminal conviction for domestic violence. Mootness The mother argues the order terminating her visitation with the minor children should be vacated as moot because she claims she has a constitutionally protected liberty interest in maintaining her relationship with her children. See Santana, 467 U.S. at 8-9, 104 S.Ct. at 2759. The mother's claims fail because her right to parent her children has been adequately protected by the district court's order allowing only supervised visitation. See id. at 10, 104 S.Ct. at 2760. In addition, the mother's interests are adequately represented by her counsel. The district court has made no suggestion that the mother will not be protected from adverse rulings affecting her visitation. See id. at 10, 104 S.Ct
