Should age be a risk factor when treating solitary pulmonary nodules? JF The Journal of Thoracic Disease JO The Journal of

Thoracic Disease SP 483 VO 49 IS 9 AB One of the many problems in evaluating lung cancer is determining whether a nodule is malignant and, if so, whether it is stage I or stage II. In most cases, the only way to make this determination is by biopsy. Among the risk factors for lung cancer is age. Several studies have shown that average age-adjusted incidence of lung cancer increases from 10% in men and 8% in women in the fifth decade to 25% in men and 16% in women in the seventieth decade. These studies also demonstrate that the age of onset is earlier in current smokers than in former smokers. If a patient is older than age sixty, he or she should be referred to a lung cancer specialist for evaluation. Solitary pulmonary nodules in the elderly population are often attributable to an inflammatory disease. However, a majority of cases in which pulmonary nodules are discovered also have cancer in other sites. Fifty-one per cent of patients with a single nodule on X-ray are found to have pulmonary cancer. Between

6% and 18% of solitary pulmonary nodules are cancerous. As a rule, malignant solitary pulmonary nodules do not regress, although they may contain calcifications and become less visible on subsequent X-ray films. Most are not resected because of their size, location or resectability. If a patient with a solitary pulmonary nodule which is only 1 centimeter or less in diameter is over age sixty, then follow-up of such a patient should be by CT scan yearly rather than by X-ray.Q: How to create an image with a gradient background with an animated fade in I've been unable to figure out how to create an animated image like in the link below. I assume a gif or an animated png would work better.

Any ideas? The animation: A:

Hume 2-4-4-2 The Hume 2-4-4-2, also known as the "Nashville" was a railway locomotive used by the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway from 1904 to 1925. The locomotive had four (later three) piston valves, two boilers with diameter fire boxes, and it had a weight of 100 tons. History The locomotive's early life can be traced back to the Lycoming Locomotive Works, where two engines were built in 1902 for the Belfast and Great Southern Railway, the same year they were built, they were acquired by the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway. The locomotive was originally called the "New Cumberland" in reference to the fact it was based in Cumberland, Tennessee, where it operated from 1904 to 1925. It was in use at the time the Little Rock Locks and Dam opened, which took water up to the St. Louis Southwestern Railway at the Tennessee River. The locomotive was the first NC&StL locomotive to be delivered by the Lycoming Locomotive Works, and was the only NC&StL locomotive to have a steel body. The first NC&StL locomotive that was finished by that company had a wooden body, but that was soon replaced by a steel body. After the turn of the century, the company introduced larger locomotives, such as the 17-ton “Columbia,” “Shiloh” and “Mississippian,” and they all had fireboxes. The Nashville was the first of many NC&StL locomotives with fireboxes, which became very common after this. In 1925, the NC&StL decided to replace the Nashvill by building the first locomotives with eight cylinders. They were built by Baldwin Locomotive Works. Preservation Two Nashvill locomotives are preserved by the Silver Comet Railway. One is on display on our mainline in northern Tennessee, and the other in historic service as number #722. Number 722 is hauling a Z20 for the Illinois Railway Museum. References
