restoring their dominant position can be done in a multitude of ways. the challenge is not about the physical movement of the hawk, but more the mental one of getting it to believe it is safe to leave the lead. your dog must be able to trust you. because of the sheer size of this raptor, if the dog or cat does not get back, its life could be in danger. like any dog, you must start training the hawk one day at a time. you will have many chances to bond with the hawk and allow your pet to find its place in your life. even if its rawness gives it a disadvantage, the bird is excited to be out in the open air and enjoying your company. besides, the spectator effect can be a nice perk of the job. attending an event at a wildlife sanctuary with training hawks is like going to a zoo with a caged lion and seeing its reaction to someone watching. i think of the hawk when i see the chagrin on the dog's face as it walks away when asked to do something it just cant do. an agreement with your local animal shelter is also important. some of these shelters have programs for training animals and others work with wildlife rehabilitators. sometimes, shelter staff will have hawks that need training. most require you to attend an orientation before putting any hawk into training. they will show you how to properly feed, water, and cage the bird. many of them even provide some basic instructions about behavior. birds are much more difficult to train than dogs are. some birds are so wild that they are not really capable of being trained. because hawks kill their prey, you must train your hawk to allow you to, even temporarily, feed it. in its wild state, a hawk is called a raptor. when it returns to you after a hunt, you might call it a retort. you also need to teach your hawk to be gentle with its prey. when you are cleaning the bird, make sure to pick it up by its talons.
