it takes a great deal of practice, a great deal of dedication and a fair amount of luck to attain the skill levels required to do psycho-physical assessments of facial mimicry and deception. in some ways, we draw a blank most of the time and really have no idea what we are going to see. its unlikely we would have seen much of the material on this cd had it not been for keltners research. so while we may not have the answer to what we are going to see, we do have the tools to take the mystery out of it. what we can tell you is that a good facemask is critical because when we are able to pull the mask off, we get emotional change, defensive body language and facial gestures that look like they are from another person entirely. more importantly, this is where we can use the power of our emotions to read through context the emotions we see in what we see and know that they are telling us more than we are doing the giving. we see a very sad person with a happy face or a rather angry person with a smiling face when they try to tell us something is wrong. understanding facial expressions goes a long way in figuring out who is lying. it means that in many cases we can know how and why someone is lying even if its hard to explain. the cd is loaded with images of faces that show our typical response to a suspects emotional state. also included are some still images of expert faces (me, carole vance) and drawings (head parts) to help you learn how to use the masks. we find that clients learn much more when we teach them to look like an expert and that the emotion that they are learning to read gives them the opportunity to practice what they have learned.
