They all claim to be suitable for growing kids, but when it comes to the real, hard-hitting, cat-and-mouse academic games, most nursery games are not as educational as they claim to be. It is because not all programs are designed in a scientific way. Some also get their game providers by buying them. Many preschool games don't have any educational value and are only developed as video game providers. Some more games are there for competitive playing. Children learn and build simple things (concepts) without them, and skills require their controlled skills to be developed. This needs that the main things that children learn need the use of their senses - hearing, sight, touch, even smell. For this, the use of media is not necessary as long as they are given the correct tools to use. For example, a child might be given a colorful simple board with letters and numbers on it, and numbers placed in different or the same order as the letters. As soon as they see that they can place numbers in the right or wrong order, they are automatically forming their skills of identifying and composing English or numbers. This does not require the child to watch a whole computer game to be able to learn the skills of analyzing or composing. In a preschool, children are encouraged to show their talents through drawing, singing, dancing, acting, sports. It is more important that they are encouraged to play safely and have fun. This is because when children have fun, their interest in learning will be stronger. When children are engaged in childhood activities, they will not view school as a negative or distressing experience. Educational toys have also become more advanced in recent years. As technology advances and
